

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

An area of low pressure over Northern Ireland will drift away only very slowly during Sunday and will continue to bring heavy and possibly thundery showers to parts of Southwest Scotland. These could bring 10-15 mm within an hour, and perhaps isolated totals of 30 mm in 3 hours in parts of Dumfries and Galloway, falling on wet ground.

The showers are expected to ease on Sunday evening.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 00:05 on Sun, 08th Sep 2013 until 21:00 on Sun, 08th Sep 2013

Heavy showers will continue to affect parts of southwest Scotland on Saturday night and at times on Sunday.

The public should be aware of the risk of localised travel disruption due to surface water flooding.
